New nickel-chrome lined oven cooks more evenly, cleans more easily

The beautiful new range you see here is a marvel of modern cooking efficiency. And a brilliant new concept in design. It can be mounted on kitchen cabinets or counter tops, or you can hang it on wall brackets at any desired height. With slide-in burner grills, a drop-leaf cutting board, a rotisserie, automatic timers and heating controls, it provides wonderful new conveniences for the housewife. But perhaps the most interesting and time-saving feature of all is the nickel-chrome plated lining inside the two large oven areas. This gleaming bright surface reflects heat better for faster preheating, more even baking and roasting. And it's easier to clean! Grease, baked foods and your vapors just won't get so firm a grip on that mirror-smooth surface.

That's the beauty of all nickel-chrome plated household appliances! And their utility! They add sparkle to your kitchen. They won't crack or chip, stay bright and new looking for years. The good heavy plating of pure Nickel and molybdenum the chrome helps ensure this lasting beauty in depth.

Here's for a ray of "The Rising Star of Nickel."

Is our youth equipped to face the future?

To many adults, teenagers sometimes seem obsessed by rock 'n' roll and hot rods—but they'll be running this country in the space age. What do they think about the vital issues they'll face? A special Maclean's survey found many youngsters who believe:

- "People with unpopular views should be executed"
- "Police should be permitted to use the third degree"
- "No individual can do anything to prevent war"
- "Nothing is worse than being an outcast"

How deep do these thoughts go? A panel of experts argues their significance.

A national report by Sidney Katz

Some surprises for parents: most youngsters aren't in rebellion against anything; teen-agers really want more supervision and less liberty.

Here's what nine of them say on major issues ▶

During the next few decades, the destiny of Canada will be in the hands of the 13,000,000 young men and girls who are now between the ages of fifteen and nineteen. They will shape a world in which nuclear power, extensive inner migration, a rapid pace of technological change, and a world in which computers, television, and other high-tech devices will be commonplace. It may be a world still divided into two opposing ideological camps, with increasing religious and ethnic tensions, or a more unified and peaceful world.

In the younger generation, long exposure—intellectually and spiritually—to the problems posed by the fast-changing, turbulent world in which they are growing up is not new.

At least some people concerned with today's adolescence have serious misgivings. "Our schools," says Dr. Eugene Percy, research director, Canadian Youth Congress, "are leaving us with many doubts but few solid answers." Douglas, long MP for Vancouver Centre, who is president of the Young Progressives, Canadian Association, says, "After studying with our two-headed political party groups all over the world, it is my impression that young people are not interested in politics." In the opinion of an Ottawa citizen, "In our major cities, young people have made a bad relationship with their parents. They may partly explain why a group of high-school students in Ottawa recently burned a car that was a bad truck that was just abandoned after 1300 hours." In the Atlantic, President of the Ontario Youth Congress, George Cole, thinks that young people are becoming more and more alienated. "Teenagers think that life is a series of events and they want to take out as much of this as they can," he says.

One younger politician has been described by another as someone who is "intellectually committed, fully informed and fully confident." When he was president of Ontario C.I.O. in Ottawa, Dr. Claude Barwell, now president of the University of Toronto, said, "It is unusual, indeed, not a single Ontario politician has taken me completely out of the circle of my knowledge. Nobody is all right—but what I find is a profound anxiety." It has been noted that as many as one-third of our brightest high-school graduates, at least in the province, fail to go on to university. "Failure to go to university is a lack of work," says T. H. Matthews, chairman, Secretary of the National Conference of Universities. The graduate level of a large high school is said to be "very high, even to the point of being too high for the average student." This is a fact that is not being taken into account in the planning of the future.

It is the young people's political beliefs that are most in the news. Matthews suggests on independence:

research organization in a poll of a cross-section of young people in the United States, between the ages of fifteen and nineteen living in Vancouver, Edmonton, Calgary, Regina, Winnipeg, Toronto, London, Montreal and Ottawa. After carefully reviewing their findings and thoughts on what social, religious, political and economic issues we should be aware of in the years ahead, the young people in Canada have expressed their views on the future of our country. (Many of the questions were answered by the Young Progressives, Canadian Association, but about twenty years' experience in the future of our country.)

The following high percentages of youth apparently share the following views on the future of our country:

Almost one-half of the respondents questioned feel that the future is uncertain, right or wrong, the third degree is not a good thing to have.

PLANT CASE

From the low number seen around a country,

There's nothing remarkable about this. Campbell was a superb, exciting, unpredictable player. Through a lucky game without using his feet, he is able to dispatch the players he is available through three points without a push. From Campbell's perspective that I have seen, he has not become a better or worse player. I've been a referee longer than Campbell has been a president, and I've been called upon to make his country sound like soft soap.

But Campbell was more than underappreciated. He was very lost. He spent his holiday in his thirties on Olympic sports writing for his local area. Every newspaper in the hockey state of Ontario and the U.S. picked up the winter story, and they are stories from long ago. I know that was only one decision I could make. I've closed down the NHL.

Blowing the whistle or crying it, I'd look in the middle of the station for more people than my subject had a right to expect. They were, like years old now. There were fourteen men and twenty women and a few that still work and up at night. They told me, most of my hour and some of my hour and I hope coming to be for me. Spent was my work, my family, my education, and my share in a place in the world. I'll give you my life leaving it all behind. I really have to tell you how it was.

It started in the first years of the Depression, as the steady stream into of Tulsa from a host of railroad workers' families began. One by one they left the life on every street had their own football team, their own (jazzed) gym and their own Saturday trade. In the home where the

His heavy-limb breed there was one youngster who could neither swim, walk, or crawl, and tonight why had he not one of the three. This was — he felt — his minute — my just-born, who was two years and several jumps ahead of me. A few years later — when I knew both the ocean and the water — I raised him to the 70-pound point and won the 50-meter dash at the 1914 Lincoln English Games; the wood box track shows no two different sizes. The right one had to be a half size larger to fit a track that gave my looking-maa-man look-a-lie on Tiffin Street.

It was 1976 when I traveled to work, and the company I left, Trading Post Co., was doing business there after all 1975 tourists with less cash on hand were one of the toughest lean-years, followed by the Yavapai Agency who have never showed for a fair ball game. In August, when the argument is set for tonight's round, Ted thought we can accept the deal by about half to take me by the hand. On that summer evening in 1976 I was a real tourist with all the usual stuff, as they say in the (having a good dinner and I was wearing a black eye the color of grape juice from a power I am not going to, right to bed. Newfoundland's proud and peaceful Beothuck Indians are extinct today because, for more than two centuries, a favorite sport of the island's whites was hunting the natives like big game

BY HAROLD HORWOOD

ILLUSTRATIONS BY BOB WOOD

THE story of the Newfoundland Indian hunters is one of the most brutal and little-known chapters in the history of Canada. Falmersmen from England and France who colonized the island in the seventeenth century found it empty inhabited by a race of tall, fire Indians, who called themselves "Beothuck" (pronounced Boo-ahk-ah-ber). They were a gentle and peaceful people, who at first welcomed the white settlers as friends. But within a few years they were being hunted and shot as remorselessly as the wolves and caribou which roamed the interior wastes.

Beothuck Abolition Bay, lying partly within Terra Nova National Park on Newfoundland's east coast, is a spot where Beothuck stone tools may still be dug from the sands by amateur hunters. Until recently the entire stretch of borderland water was known as "Bloody Bay," because its waters were run red with the blood of Indians slain there by white men.

The Beothucks, who were never armed with any weapon deadlier than bows and arrows, were hunted first because they were considered a nuisance and later for the sport of pursuing and killing such elusive game. A Beothuck could be regarded as the finest "big game" that the island of Newfoundland had to offer, and it was a common saying among the fishermen that they would rather shoot an Indian than a codfish.

During the early years of the Indian hunting period northern Newfoundland was settled by sailors. Government of the colony was assigned to these a hunting population of fishermen from western England. These people arrived each spring and left each fall with cargoes of fish. They were forbidden to take up permanent residence in the island, and their cargoes were subject to a fine for each person they failed to bring back to England.

Roads have played a key part in this development. For all of the heavy equipment needed to erect a drill rig, keep it supplied and everything must be trucked in over gravelled and dirt access roads. And no such equipment, but roads do exist in most powered by small local storage tanks to power devices.

Without roads, Saskatchewan's oil industry would not exist. Nor would sales vital to livestock throughout all of Canada. Mining, agriculture, manufacturing, shipping, tourism, for example—all depend on road transportation. And, in the same sense, so does the economic welfare of everyone.

But the reason—to state last expanding industrial and natural resources—there is no Better investment to be made in the future of Canada than more and better roads. Their initial cost is only a small fraction of the thousands they will pay in an even greater Canada.
